Cooking

By MARY JANE McCLURE

During the honeymoon life looks luminous to the young wife. There comes a time, though, when cold, hard-hearted Reality grins mockingly at her. Then she realizes that, after all, life is not one grand, sweet symphony of joy, and the airship of romance comes down to earth with a sudden dull and sickening thud. Love and indepetion have no affinity one for another. On the other hand, carelessly selected, improperly cooked food and indigestion are twin souls. The moral is vivid. If love is to be kept as a permanent dweller in the home the door must be barred against indigestion. So the sensible young wife begins to study the first principles of cooking.

Her thirst for knowledge to assuage;

Her cookery is sure to please.

At the start of the season these suits and overcoats were the best values in town at their respective prices—$10.00, $15.00 and $22.50. This was proved by the fact that thousands of these smart suits and overcoats were sold at these prices, and are to-day giving guaranteed service and satisfaction.

The descriptions that fitted them at the start of the season, apply to them to-day. The pledges we made for their quality and service-giving, hold good as well. They are the same good clothes in every sense of the word, at a great deal less than the prices were at the first of the season. We haven't done anything to these clothes but reduce the price. We see no reason why we should do anything to our ad. of several months ago (which we reproduce below). except to show that these same clothes are yours for considerable less money.

The city has taken half of our Walker street store, forcing us to unload our enormous stock.
